

List of US Teacher Training Programs that could lead to obtaining K-12 Japanese language teaching credentials

*This list was updated in January 2026 by using primarily information available on the internet and by utilizing information made publicly available by state education authorities.

*This list is only intended for providing initial information for individuals seeking teacher training programs to become K-12 Japanese teachers in the US. Please contact the institutions offering the programs, as well as the Department of Education in your state for further and more detailed information.

*K-12 is a broad term that include a range of educational levels including kindergarten, primary education, secondary education, Etc. Please note that some training programs only lead to licensure in a certain education level (7-12, for example) and will not cover licensure for the entire K-12 range.

*For the States that are not represented in this list, please contact the department of education in that state and inquire with the office in charge of teacher credentialing/licensing for information about how to become a K-12 Japanese teacher. Most states will have a way for transferring teaching credentials from a different state. Some states will recognize teacher training programs done in other states as well, provided that the training programs are certified by the department of education of the state that program is in.

*This list is not exhaustive and may not include all programs that currently exist. If you discover any inaccuracies with this list, or discover additional programs that could lead to obtaining K-12 Japanese language teaching credentials in the US, please let us know by contacting the Japan Foundation Los Angeles at jfaeducation@jpf.go.jp
