GREETING FROM THE DIRECTOR

JFLA is happy to announce the launch of “Japan in Asia,” our new film series which feature films that have been created through collaborations between Japan and other countries in Asia. Asia-wide co-production is becoming a trend in the Japanese film industry with more and more movies being created with directors, actors, and staff from a wide range of countries. These films provide many interesting insights into understanding the region and Japan in general. What themes in life resonate throughout the region? Are there any qualities or nuances in acting or directing that can be considered as truly Japanese? If you are interested in these questions, this new initiative is for you. I would like to take this opportunity to thank all of our partner organizations that have made this film series possible.

As it just so happens, one of the films we will be screening, “Hand in the Glove,” was almost entirely shot in Kumamoto, a city that was recently hit by a huge earthquake. My thoughts are with those affected in the city and other parts of the Kyushu region.

Sincerely,

Hideki Hara, Director

There are two different love affairs this winter.

Sherine (Sherine Wong), a talented editor of a leading Hong Kong fashion magazine was ordered to come to Osaka suddenly during winter holiday season. Because the assignment was in such a short notice, she could not get hold of professional photographers. Instead Sherine's friend Naomi introduced her brother Tatsuya (Kenji Kohashi), an armature photographer for Sherine's disposal. Through their work, distance between Sherine and Tatsuya gets closer.

Sol-ah (Paek Sol-ah), a part-time flight attendant and a co-owner of Japanese fashion shop in Seoul visits Osaka Minami to see her lover, Shinsuke (Terunosuke Takezai). He is married with a son and is running Korean shop in Minami. Sol-ah tries to find out ways to get out from this no-way-out situation.

It was particularly cold winter in Minami.
