Greetings!

At the end of this month, we will be temporarily moving up to the 3rd floor of the same building in the Miracle Mile to make room for the renovation of our current office on the first floor. Our multipurpose hall will be equipped with an upgraded projector and a bigger screen for your superior experience. A new foyer space will be created with wall-to-ceiling bookcases that contain all sorts of materials for Japanese language teachers and learners. The renovation will be completed by the end of July, and we will be celebrating our reopening in early September through a series of events at our new office.

Even from our temporary office, we will be reaching out to the local community and beyond, more actively than before. In fact, some of our JF Nihongo classes will be held in our temporary office as well, and we will be collaborating with a neighboring museum for a project featuring Japanese handmade paper (Washi). So please stay tuned!

He gets a contract to aid in a manga series with an upcoming artist but his ambitions stymie him from it initially.

JAPANESE LANGUAGE EDUCATION UPDATE 42:
MESSAGE FROM DEREK CHIN, OUR NEW ADVOCACY COORDINATOR

I joined the Japan Foundation, Los Angeles in 2016, after working for the JET Program as a CIR (Coordinator for International Relations) for 3 years. The Japan Foundation was appealing because of its emphasis on international exchange and cross-cultural understanding, a direction that I myself wanted to continue after finishing my CIR role. Having now taken up new Japanese language advocacy duties from this year, I am honored to have the opportunity to contribute to JFLA’s overarching vision.

Through the support and promotion of Japanese language education, I hope to help promote greater cross-cultural dialogue. This is undoubtedly a powerful tool in intercultural understanding, as it allows us to interact with Japanese speakers on a direct, person-to-person level, beyond the stereotypes and beyond the filter. It allows us to understand others from their point of view while expressing our own, which is crucial for any sort of communication.

Moreover, opening up dialogue by learning Japanese language and culture provides us the opportunity to see the intersections of our society and Japanese society, as well as of our individual experiences. That is, rather than seeing our cultures as diametrically opposed, how can we discuss and relate to social issues and challenges as global citizens with our own respective cultural backgrounds, and work together to face them? How can we create meaningful dialogue between Japanese people and non-Japanese people, and instead of talking about very basic topics or drawing very broad, superficial conclusions – Japan is “this way” and America is “that way,” – how can we exchange more thoughtful ideas about real issues from multiple angles and perspectives? At the more personal level, such as when making new friends, how can we develop empathy for experiences shared between different cultures?
I must admit that I do not know the answer to these questions. It is therefore my hope to work together with the rest of you to find the answers. By working together, what we may discover is an idea on contributing to not only Japanese society, not only American society, but a globally interconnected society.

JFLA WILL BE HIBERNATING UNTIL AUGUST

We will be temporarily closing our office at the end of this month for remodeling and moving into a temporary space until the end of July in preparation for our grand re-opening in September. During this time we will still be organizing our core programs; however, events at our auditorium such as our Japanese movie screenings and lectures will go on hiatus until we are ready to show off our new space with an updated projection system. Our JF Nihongo classes will relocate to our temporary office (in the same building) starting in June so there won’t be any impact for those who are currently taking our classes here in the Miracle Mile. We thank everyone who has visited and supported us during our first five years here and we look forward to supporting the local and national community for the next ten years.
